Suicide by Drowning.

This morning, about half-past nine o'clock, Mrs. Bradford, who lives in the lower part of the city, and is about sixty years of age, committed suicide by drowning herself in the river at Shultz's grade. Two small boys, Charles Hasson and Henry Gable, who witnessed the act, says that she ran by them exclaiming "good bye everybody," and plunging into the water was drowned before they could aid her. They recovered the body but life was extinct. Mrs. Bradford was the mother of John and William Bradford, employees at the Maysville Cotton Mills. No reason is known for the act.

A Suggestion.

Wall Street News.
"It's no use, Mary," he said, as he got off the train at a station in New Jersey, and found his wife waiting to drive him home to the farm.

"What happened?"
"Why, down in York the bulls are predicting a big wheat crop."

"Well, isn't that what we hope for?"
"Yes, but the bears say that England won't buy a bushel of us this fall."

"Oh, well, Samuel, I shouldn't worry over it," she said, as she surrendered the lines. "If wheat is big and prices low, we'll make up for it in the cider. You know we can water that almost half, and sell all we can make."

The Kind of Answer He Gave.

Atlanta Constitution.

"What was all that scuffling about, down stairs?" asked Mrs. Hilboots, as her lord and master strode into the room.

"Nothing except that monkey-faced dude asking for Sarah Ann."

"What did he say?"

"Oh, he begun by saying he was speaking from the bottom of his heart, and so on."

"And what answer did you give?"

"I grew spasmodic, too," answered Hilboot, gently tapping his little angelic number twelve shoe, "and gave him an answer from the bottom of my sole."

SAYS the Louisville Commercial: The Lexington newspapers, after having been fined for contempt of court, are having their eyes opened to the smallness of some of the ways of their town by seeing that newspapers elsewhere are allowed to give expression to popular sentiment in regard to judges elected by the people.

Mr. Bayard's Record.

Boston Post.

"I can put my finger right on a secession speech made by Thomas F. Bayard of Delaware," said a Blaine Republican who fears that statesman, to a friend of ours, a day or two ago. The Post is offering large premiums now for every secession speech that Mr. Bayard ever made. We defy his worst enemy to produce such a one. Mr. Bayard's record since he entered the Senate to succeed his honored father, fifteen years ago, is a part of the most creditable history made during that time. It needs neither defense nor explanation. The best service that can be done for it is simple presentation. It will stand alone and defy every assault. So will his record back of that, but it has not been to so great an extent public property. It is that to which those who fear him turn in the unworthy hope of finding something that will weaken the profound confidence which the men of all parties feel in his honor, his patriotism, his great abilities. Therefore, we wish to say that Thomas F. Bayard did not, and could not make a secession speech. According to a biographer of the Senator, in June, 1861, twenty-three years ago this present month of roses, while hopes were still entertained by many a peaceful settlement of difficulties, a peaceful meeting of citizens without distinction of party was held in Dover, and Mr. Bayard was one of the speakers. He spoke with perfect calmness, and reminded his hearers that "with this secession, or revolution, or by whatever name it may be called, the State of Delaware has naught to do. To our constitutional duties toward each and every member of this Union we have been faithful at all times. Never has a word, a thought, an act of ours been unfaithful to the Union of our fathers; in letter and in spirit it has been faithfully kept by us."

He did, however, picture the horrors of a fratricidal war on so gigantic a scale as then seemed probable—the ruin that would be wrought and the danger that, whatever might be the issue, constitutional liberty might perish in the struggle. Better, he thought, "while deeply exploring the revolution which has severed eleven States from the Union," if a peaceful accommodation were impossible that the discontented States should be allowed to withdraw than to run the awful risk of such a war. In short, he occupied the same ground with respect to that struggle that was held by Hon. Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, and Horace Greely, of New York. His eloquence, so earnest and yet so dispassionate, had great weight, and the meeting resolved "that there was no necessity for convening the Legislature." The biographer adds: "This speech, it is alleged by many, saved Delaware from secession." There is where Bayard stood and that is what Bayard did when his own State was trembling before the shock of advancing and receding waves of passion peculiar to those tumultuous times. He has always stood on the side of conservatism, honor and safety in public affairs. His name upon the ticket to oppose Blaine would stand for security and honest methods in the conviction of our business men, just as it would mean purity and patriotism in the public service. His character, from boyhood to his present vigorous and honored maturity, will endure as few others can the result of the closest scrutiny. With him as their candidate the Democracy would be invincible.

KENTUCKY furnished seven thousand men for the war of 1812. Only four of them attended the late re-union.
